"The TRUE STORY of FRANKENSTEIN!"

ALONE IN HIS STUDY, PROFESSOR CARTER NICHOLS, GOTHAM CITY SCIENTIST, PONDER'S OVER A TIME-WORN DOCUMENT...

I CAN'T BELIEVE IT! THIS OLD DOCUMENT CLAIMS THAT THE STORY OF FRANKENSTEIN, THE SCIENTIST WHO CREATED A MONSTER, IS REALLY TRUE!

THERE'S ONE SURE WAY OF SATISFYING MY CURIOSITY. I'LL USE MY POWERS OF TIME-HYPNOSIS AND SEND MYSELF INTO THE PAST!

PRESENTLY, PROF. NICHOLS GAZES AT HIS IMAGE IN A MIRROR...

... BACK TO THE PAST, BACK TO EUROPE A HUNDRED AND FIFTY YEARS AGO -

...AND IS WHIRLED BACK THROUGH TIME TO THE CENTRAL EUROPE OF A CENTURY AND A HALF AGO!

YES, THAT'S YOUNG BARON FRANKENSTEIN'S ANCESTRAL CASTLE. STAY AWAY! HE CALLS HIMSELF A-A SCIENTIST! SO FRANKENSTEIN REALLY LIVES! I MUST SEE HIM.

SOON, ANNOUNCING HIMSELF AS A SCIENTIST FROM A DISTANT LAND...

I'M BARON FRANKENSTEIN AND THIS IS MY COUSIN, COUNT METTERN. IF YOU'RE A FELLOW SCIENTIST, WELCOME.

MAY I SEE YOUR EXPERIMENTS?

MY ASSISTANT, IVAN! HE'LL SHOW YOU HOW THIS MACHINE CREATES ENERGY!

A CRUDE ELECTROSTATIC MACHINE! BUT I DON'T SEE ANY MONSTER HERE. IVAN IS A GIANT, YES - BUT HE'S KINDLY!

BUT THE HUGE CREATURE TOSSES THE SERVANTS ASIDE LIKE STRAWS!

ADVENTURES of "D.C." and QUICKIE

WEATHERPROOF

BY JOHN POLARD

JOE MCANYON was a very careful man and he had planned the murder of Mr. Elmer Smith methodically and calmly.

Tonight was the night, and when the twelve o'clock news came, Jonathan would be on his way through the cold winter night to get a rest and so the old man, shut gasping his face and protecting himself in the same time.

Two years before, Joe Jonathan had been a poor criminal in Seattle. His crimes started as pocket picking, and small graft deals with local politicians. But Joe was ambitious and had a quick tongue and played everything from the angles. So when he killed a man in a bar fight, a cool deliberate murder, there were enough witnesses to swear that it had been self-defense on Joe's part, and he was acquitted by a corrupt local court.

There had been a girl out there too, and the girl was Elmer Smith's daughter. Joe was smart enough to know that if he could marry her, his political ambitions would be realized. But he wasn't smart enough to know that Elmer Smith, one of the few honest lawyers in the town, knew his record from the beginning, and threatened to bring him up before the grand jury if he didn't leave town.

So he left the scene of his ambitious beginnings and got a job in a street town in upper New York state as a sort of introduction to New York itself. You couldn't hit the big town without plenty of cash and a good front.

Joe moved into Chamville and started over again in the same slick way. He joined a few of the town's organizations and gained for himself a reputation for being a good fellow, a man who would get things done, with a promising interest in civic affairs in the town. The smaller employees of the town's departments weren't aware of accepting small favors from Joe. He was spending his small capital very cleverly—it would pay dividends in the end.

Chamville was one of the small towns near Lake Placid and specialized in taking over the school-age patients who were discharged from nearby sanatoriums but who had to continue to be under medical care.

Two weeks before the night on which Joe Jonathan was planning his perfect crime, a small house on the outskirts of the town was being prepared for its new occupants, an elderly man who came to live there alone after his discharge from the hospital in Placid.

At the weekly town meeting, the list of new arrivals was read off. This had been one of Joe's ideas. As he so often put it, the patients who moved into Chamville were potential evidence, and a small committee of citizens would arrange to call on these new neighbors within a week after their arrival. Joe always headed this committee. It was he who talked so well and made the "Most True Neighbor Club" a success.

That evening, Mr. Parley got up and read off the new names.

"Mrs. Ellen Bennett took a room at the Elwyn's house; Mr. Bob Austin rented the old Mason house for two months; Mr. E. Smith bought the greenhouse beyond the town square."

Joe felt vaguely uncomfortable. Smith was not a name that he could ever hear without feeling a slight tingling of hair. Alas, after all this time, but—

"Do you have a first name on Mr. E. Smith, Al?" he asked.

"No, Joe," Mr. Parley said. "Why?"

"Just wondered—used to know someone by the name of Smith." This brought a laugh from the meeting. Joe was always such a card.

He didn't go on the following week the following Sunday, pleading a cold. At the following meeting Mr. Parley read and announced the names to look. Joe Jonathan had stayed at Chamville. The applause made Joe grin. This was a step in the right direction. As a matter, so he hoped of a well known town in New York state had no possibility.

"And now the report on the visiting committee," said Mr. Alston.

"Mrs. Bennett is almost cured and has promised to take on some of the Red Cross work here in town. Very nice lady, full of good ideas. Mr. Austin is only a temporary resident and cannot see work to be much interested, but has promised to come to a meeting next week. Mr. E. Smith doesn't offer much action in the way of cooperation. He's on in years, very deaf, and seems to be somewhat for the West coast where his home is."

Joe told his fingers twisting over the arm of the chair. It wouldn't do now to ask too many questions about this Smith man, but undoubtedly it was Elmer Smith. The kernel of power settled up to Joe. Smith had in Chamville all the way from Washington State—and it would it's too long before he would find out about Joe Benton for Mayor and his men.

Joe left the morning at once, so it was gone and spent the next few weeks devising a method for disposing of Miss Smith. He went back one afternoon early in June to the first meeting and in his gait and fear, believed that his own question about Smith's fate might be answered after Smith was discovered dead. Therefore, he couldn't go to the house where Smith lived alone (as he first planned) and report that he had found him a suicide. The more likelihood is that not all people get in thinking.

Finally, he settled on a reasonable course of action. He would leave his room in the inn for a walk. There was nothing mysterious in that, for he often walked alone late at night. There wasn't anything to do in this high place, and he was gratified to think that he had made at least a slightly extensive walk months before, before knowing that this would prove a perfect alibi. The usual thing, away with Smith should be easy. If he was old and weak or injured, Joe's bare hands would do the job very easily. The verdict would be that some tramp wandered into the house, was persecuted, and killed the old man. Very easy, Joe thought.

The clock struck eleven and bedtime started the two-mile walk to the quarters of the town where Smith lived. It was cold now, and the moon disappeared under a cloud. Benton was too wrapped in his thoughts to notice the cloudy darkness. He kept on walking until he reached the cottage, finally noticed in the night.

The room was easier than he could have imagined. He used a window for entry and found the old man asleep on a bed in the front room. A brief struggle, and the thing was over. He had kept no lights, since the place was so small that he easily found Smith by the sound of his breathing. Everything was in order. Leaving the bed, he groped his way into another room. There might be papers, letters of some sort which would be better destroyed. There was a big tall-top desk in the back room. The drawers were missing. All the drawers were drawn and he could hardly see where he was going. Lighting a match this time, he made a thorough search but found nothing. A few pens, pencils, blank, a few advertisements, a letter from a charitable organization addressed to Mr. B. Smith asking for a contribution, and a letter's presumption. Included now that Smith had left all his important papers out West, Joe left arranged as himself for having taken this much time, nearly as long as he wished, to look for something that probably had long since been destroyed.

The perfect crime had been accomplished, and he carefully wiped the dark lens of possible fingerprints, made his way to the window through which he had entered, and raised the shade to get out. As he looked out into the night, he gasped in horror. There clearly he had hardly noticed . . . the darkness in the air . . . During the time he had been in the house the clouds had let go a thorough and efficient snow and then again. The whole was covered with a half inch of white powder, well scattered down by a film of snow. Carefully he moved a step on the frozen roof. His foot was easily noticed. The sky had cleared now and it was turning colder by the minute, but, he realized, it would never be cold enough to freeze the stuff enough to support him all the way back to town. He began to sob in anger and defeat. There was nothing to be done. He couldn't stay there; there was no escape. Carefully he made some plough impressions until the morning after a storm, so the streets would be this way right up to the inn.

He decided to become a rat and walked quickly back to town, got to his room, and set up the rest of the night. If the weather would change to rain, it would only snow all over again. But the moon continued to shine on him faintly through the long night and the morning was clear and cold.

An arrow of black ice announced the presumptuous knock at his door. The angry sheriff was there with Mr. Purdy of the "Main Town Neighbor" committee.

"We're sorry to bother you at this time, Benton," said the sheriff, "but Mr. Purdy has promised to deliver some evidence to Mr. Benton Smith's home this morning and . . ."

"Benton Smith?" Joe whispered. Then he began to shake violently. The bewildered sheriff and Purdy accompanied him to the local station after his hysterical confession of the murder.

Mr. Purdy said to call that story for months afterwards. He always ended it by saying, "And, you know, there were those very strange things about that whole Benton case. First of all, of course, Benton had become so preoccupied in his determination that a B. Smith could be some other than Miss Smith, that he killed the wrong man. Secondly, the only reason Joe's car became mine was not of coincidence, and thirdly, we had right peculiar weather that month because that morning right after noon when we were in the inn, instead of a clear sky, and in our half hour, the time it would've taken us to get to the station for the madman and back, there wasn't a trace of snow, or frost, or anything whatever that would have led to Benton."

HOW TO SIGNAL A CAR FOR HELP AT NIGHT

● It's midnight. It's an emergency. How to "flag down" a passing motorist? Your flashlight is your best bet. Swing your flashlight across the road . . . with the beam down! But . . . better be sure it's powered with "Eveready" batteries... powerful, dependable, they outlast all other brands!*

KEEP YOUR LIGHT MOVING, says the AAA. Standing about 50 feet to the rear of your car, wave the flashlight across the road . . . with the beam down! DON'T throw the beam into the eyes of the oncoming motorist! A light in a driver's eyes can cause a serious accident!

KEEP A "DANGER SIGNAL" HANDY! Red means "danger." So here's what you can do to turn a flashlight into a danger signal. Roll a sheet of red cellophane around head of light. Hold it in place with a rubber band. Twist ends of cellophane to resemble a flare. Keep an "Eveready" flashlight handy in your car.

Proof!... in the laboratory, in your own flashlight...

"EVEREADY" BATTERIES OUTLAST ALL OTHER BRANDS!*

● Brighter light, longer life! That's what you want in a flashlight battery—and that's what you get with "Eveready" brand batteries. Laboratory tests prove it. And the best "laboratory" of all—your own flashlight—proves it! That's why "Eveready" batteries outsell all other brands—because they outlast all other brands!*
